location, [redacted] hosted a list server which listed the titles of over 900 PlayStation software games, and 300 Dreamcast software games. [redacted] would accept orders for illegally copied software, and would then illegally copy the software onto a writeable CD-ROM, which he would then provide to his customers. In a search of [redacted] residence, several hundred copied writeable CD-ROMs with PlayStation software titles, Dreamcast software titles, and popular business software titles were recovered. It is also from this ideal logical location for hacking activities from which [redacted] is reputed to have engaged in a considerable amount of computer intrusion activities. A Yahoo Google search reveals five web page matches for [redacted] including a [redacted] of RoC (Realm of Chaos), in which the Lair of Chaos is reported. Other reported web pages indicate [redacted] is reported to have written the "ADMsn00f1D" code, and also the ibook, "Maximum Linux Security" is reportedly written by [redacted] stated to the investigating agent that he has written the tool "snoof", a Unix DNS spoofing tool. [redacted] workstation deployed at his former employer, ITOL, has been seized, and on this workstation were identified the domains Realm of Chaos, Lair of Chaos, and also held the listing for the PlayStation and Dreamcast software titles. [redacted] also reportedly installed the network security at the Green Bay Police Department, and the Kaukauna School District. It has been stated that [redacted] instructed [redacted] on how to conduct computer intrusions.
